About the play

Trying is the story of a young Canadian girl and an old Philadelphia aristocrat trying to understand one another in what becomes Judge Biddle's final year of life. Trying is a beautiful story that sets out to reconcile two generations in the late 1960s - a time of great strife and political unrest in America. By Joanna McClelland Glass

The New York Daily News called this play "enormously bracing theatre," the playwright recalls the life-altering year she spent with Judge Francis Biddle, the former United States Attorney General and Chief Judge at Nuremberg following World War II.
